

Woodbury School at The Strong

Where Children Play to Learn

And the Entire Museum Is the Classroom

At Woodbury School we understand that every child has a unique way of learning. Our staff of early childhood teachers provide a warm, caring environment for children ages three, four, and five who learn and develop in playful activities set among the engaging, dynamic exhibits at The Strong museum.

The curriculum at Woodbury School is Reggio Emilia-inspired and is therefore responsive to the interests of the children in the class. This approach encourages teachers and students to work together to plan the curriculum and to engage in playful inquiry. Guided by teachers who facilitate their explorations, children delve deeply into topics that fascinate them, enhance skill development, and stimulate learning.
