Historical Note

Williams pinball designers introduced many pinball innovations, including ramps, scoring reels, drop targets, and modern 3-inch flippers. The company was acquired and incorporated several times, resulting in company name changes (becoming Williams Electronics, Inc. in 1974 and WMS Industries in 1987). In 1988, WMS purchased competitor Bally/Midway. The pinball division of WMS closed in 1999, after more than 50 years of designing and manufacturing electro-mechanical and solid-state pinball machines.

Duncan Brown is a software developer who worked for Williams writing software for games including slot machines and the Star Wars Episode I Pinball 2000 machine. While Brown was working at Williams, a collection of Harry Williams pinball playfield drawings from the 1970s was discovered. In 2015 he created digital scans of the drawings.

Series III_The lost pinball drawings of Harry Williams, 1965-2015

Series Scope and Content Note

This series includes scans of drawings by Harry Williams related to the design of coin operated games. The designs are for games which were not manufactured and were discovered at the Williams Manufacturing company in 1999 and were digitized by Duncan Brown in 2015. The original drawings date from 1965 to 1976.
